SHORT CURRICULUM VITAE

Dimitra Siatitsa holds a PhD from the Department of Urban and Regional Planning, School of Architecture, National Technical University of Athens (2015), a master's degree on Architecture and Urban Culture, from the Polytechnic University of Catalonia (FPC/UPC, 2005) and a diploma on Architecture, from NTUA (2001). She is currently doing her postdoctoral research on housing conditions and housing pathways of youth in Greece, at the Department of Sociology, University of Crete, and is collaborating as a researcher at the Department of Geography, Harokopio University of Athens, working on the structure of the housing stock of Athens and its impact on the city's social geography.

Her work focuses on urban studies and housing, homelessness and housing exclusion, public urban and housing policies, urban transformations and urban social movements. She has done research on the housing crisis and austerity effects, household over-indebtedness, and on alternative forms of collective housing and property. She has worked in European research projects on urban and sustainable development, social innovation, social cohesion and the welfare state. She has published her work in reports, edited books, journals and newspapers.

She is member of Cohab-Athens action-research group (<https://cohabathens.com/>), of the International Network for Urban Research and Action (<https://www.inura.org/>) and of the coordinating committee of the Southern European Housing Working Group of the European Network of Urban Research and Action (ENHR).
